

Called to Share the Mission of Jesus

Jesus and those who claim to follow him are called to bring good news to the poor. What are the various kinds of poverty that young people experience today? What might be the good news that those people are waiting for?

Jesus and those who claim to follow him are called to proclaim comfort to those whose hearts are broken. What are three ways that young people might experience a broken heart? What would be required to comfort or heal those broken hearts?

Jesus and those who claim to follow him are called to proclaim liberty to captives, to free those who are oppressed. Who are the most oppressed or overwhelmed people among teenagers today? How would the message of Jesus liberate them from their feelings of oppression?

Jesus and those who claim to follow him are called to give freedom to those in prison. This does not mean that we are to release all the thieves and murderers who are now in jail. How would you rephrase this statement to clarify what it might mean to young people today? What could you do to help those who are imprisoned?

Jesus and those who claim to follow him are called to comfort those who mourn. Name at least three situations in which young people mourn. What are some ways that we can comfort people in those situations?

(This handout is adapted from Jesus: His Message and Mission, by Thomas Zanzig [Winona, MN: Saint Mary's Press, 1996], page 44. Copyright © 1996 by Saint Mary's Press. All rights reserved.)

