A prominent actor and philanthropist was arrested today for violating speed-limit laws in the city of New Orleans. Driving a Mercedes sports coupe, currently available only in Europe to millionaires and dignitaries, the car was clocked at over 110 miles per hour, making it the fastest car ever recorded in the city's history. At the time of his arrest, the actor was wearing a headband from the new Gucci line of sportswear. He claimed that it slipped over his eyes, causing him to drive recklessly. Since the photographs have surfaced depicting the arrest and his new headwear, Gucci has experienced record high demands for their new line and has named the actor their new spokesperson. The actor was in New Orleans to film his next summer blockbuster and was due to arrive on set at the time of his arrest. The movie production company has announced major delays and financial crisis because the delay is indefinite as the actor awaits trial at an unknown date. The sports coupe was impounded but stolen only hours after the actor's arrest, and another high speed chase ensued. The vehicle thief has not yet been arrested.
